District.

1. There are 12 administrative districts in Yunnan, with headquarters at the following places:

Chaot'ung (103-39, 27-20)
Ch'uching (103-45, 25-32)
Ch'uhsiung (101-34, 25-02)
Iliang (103-09, 24-54)
Lichiang (100-15, 26-51)
Mengtzu (103-23, 23-20)

Paoshan (99-09, 25-07)
Ssumao (101-04, 22-47)
Tali (100-11, 25-43)
Wenshan (104-14, 23-22)
Wuting (102-24, 25-31)
Yuch'i (102-29, 24-23)

2. There are five assistant administrators in each district, in charge of civil administration, economics and finance, production, culture and education, and public security. The last one is the most important. The public security branches in the above-mentioned cities are divided into three sections: administrative, investigative, and executive.

Hsien

3. The hsien governments are divided into nine departments: public security, public procurator, justice, civil administration, economics and finance, construction, education, industry, and commerce. There are five classes of hsien governments, determined by size, which in turn determine the size of the public security bureau branches. A public security branch of the first class has 120 men; of the second class, 90 men; of the third class, 60 men; and of the fourth class, 40 men. The fifth-class hsien has no organized units and security is maintained by mobile units in these hsien.

Village

4. There is one chairman and one secretary in each administrative village. In every four (portion missing) villages there is a Peasants' Association

[REDACTED] There is also a director for every 10 to 12 families. The People's Militia Unit is composed of able-bodied poor farmers. These militiamen usually gather at night in the village head's office and stay there overnight. The Road Guards Unit, which is under the command of the militia unit, consists of men of the village who take turns at guard duty.
